KUDOS, KICKS & KARATS

THE UPTOWN GARDENER
by Ruth Herring
 From what I hear, I have been missed the past few weeks. Nice to know you are here.
 I am moved into my new home and settled in at least looking civil. Enjoying it very much and I don't miss cleaning that big house and going up and down steps.

Now I can focus upon what I might do to outside in my area to retain my title as the Uptown Gardener. I have all winter to think about that. I recently took a trip to Texas to visit with my brother, had a great and restful time, even though he lives in copper head country, I just watch carefully where I walk and pray I don't meet the enemy in the fallen leaves.

While there we went to Waco about 2 hours drive away to the Texas Ranger Museum which was very interesting. Anyone who is interested in guns and history should visit there. On the way home we stopped in Corsicana to get fruit cakes for the holiday. There is one place that has no law against absorbing calories, many wonderful cookies cakes breads and such. That was the highlight of the trip and other days just visited and caught up on rest and recalling memories of our past which was many.

My brother who is the youngest of us kids, growing up was a spoiled brat and being the only boy didn't help, but as we age for many years have grown very close.

One story I can tell you was he was always getting out of chores but was always around to aggravate me while trying to get mine done. I was at the barn shelling corn, which he could have easily done, but I guess dad trusted me to do it and know it would be done when he got home from work. He came flying down to the barn on his scooter and hit the edge of the cement floor and went flying over the top of the scooter and landed in a pile of fresh cow manure and plastered him real good. I was kind enough to make sure he wasn't hurt and sent him to mamma manure and all. I finished my chore without any heckling. He still very well remembers that, and he still says I had no sympathy for him. (I wonder why?)

At the super market there picked up a freebie that had some good recipes in it. here is one that might be nice for the trick or treat time of year.

Candy Corn Popcorn
about 16 cups popcorn. 1/2 cup butter divided, 6 tablespoons butter divided, 6 tablespoons corn syrup, divided, 1 cup sugar, 1 (3oz package yellow jello), 1 (3 oz orange jello)

Preheat oven to 300 degrees, line 2 baking sheets with foil, Divide popcorn into 3 bowls. In sauce pan over medium heat add 1/2 butter and corn syrup when butter is melted add 1/2 cup sugar and one box jello bring to boil and simmer 5 minutes. Pour Layer mixture over one bowl and repeat for the second bowl. When the 2 bowls are evenly coated spread out on the bake sheets and bake for 10 minutes. Layer the popcorn mixes in bags with the plain popcorn.

HEALTHY TIP:

So it's October already and cold and flu season is upon us. A time where we spend a multitude of dollars trying to avoid, or get rid of one or the other. (Trust me I have already been there this season). So here are a few tips I found to try and help us all stay healthy this cold and flu season.

Four great ways to boost your immune system according to Fox News health:

Exercise - studies show that moderate daily exercise can increase the number of cells your body produces to fight infection.

Lose Weight - carrying extra weight can put you at risk for developing certain diseases because excess fat cells cause tissue damaging inflammation.

Eat Right - consuming too much sugar or saturated fat suppresses the immune system cells responsible for attacking bacteria.

Rest up - Not getting enough sleep lowers your body's ability to fight illness. Aim to get at least seven hours each night.

Now specific to those points according to NBC news.com

Eat lean protein at every meal- the antibodies that help fight disease are actually made of protein and contain other immune boosting nutrients.

Shoot for 5 cups of fruits and veggies a day- Specifically pick ones packed with lots of vitamins A, C and E that help white blood cells fight off infection more effectively and help regulate the immune system. Sweet potatoes, carrots, dark leafy greens, lemons, oranges and grapefruit, bell peppers, papayas and broccoli, nuts, seeds and turnip greens etc are just a few suggested.

Take a 10 min walk a few times a day- exercise gets antibodies and white blood cells moving thru the body faster, so they detect illness sooner.

Get your Vitamin D- new research suggests Vitamin D could boost immune response and too low levels may be linked to an increase in seasonal colds and flu. We get Vitamin D from Sunshine and very few foods, so supplements may be needed to help boost your Vitamin D.

Reduce your stress levels- (yeah right) Do yoga, play with your dog, listen to music, find ways to chill out because research shows stress hampers how well your immune system works.

Cook with Canola and olive oils- These contain healthy fats which act as a lubricant for cells. This lubricant improves flexibility and communication between cells, which promotes immune function.

Limit your alcoholic drinks- one is okay but drinking any more could suppress the immune system.

Now going back to exercise and not feeling well. Knowing when you should continue and when you should not is important for your immune system and it all depends on what ails you. If it's just a cold it may be okay depending on how you are feeling, but if you are running a fever hitting the gym is a definite no no according to WebMD. Fever is the limiting factor. The danger is exercising and raising your body temperature internally if you already have a fever because it can make you even sicker. Another factor is if you feel any bronchial tightness working out is not advisable. Some people feel even worse if they don't exercise because their body is used to it, so it is also alright to tone it back. Instead of that run, go for a walk, instead of a high impact cardio, do some yoga or Pilates or a lighter intensity program so you are still moving.

Basic rule of thumb according to WebMD says do a neck check to determine what is the best option for you: if your symptoms are above the neck including a sore throat, nasal congestion, sneezing and tearing eyes, then it's okay to exercise. If your symptoms are below the neck such as coughing, body aches, fever, and fatigue then it's time to hang up the running shoes until these symptoms

So Take care of yourself this season and do what's best for you!

WEED CONTROL

Farmers may still have time to control weeds to improve forage quality and quantity in their fields.

Fall can be a good time to eliminate hard-to-control weeds. This is because many of the plants are feeding their root systems, which allows applied herbicide to reach the root system to potentially kill the weeds.

Mark Loux, Ohio State University Extension Weed Specialist, has discussed that the optimum timing of spraying weeds can vary based on the plant life cycle. He describes various weed life cycles into one of two categories (<http://muskingum.osu.edu/topics/agriculture-and-natural-resources/news/timing-fall-herbicide-treatments-based-on-weed-life-cycle>):

1) Must be treated before frost, which pertains to all warm-season perennials, including johnsongrass, pokeweed, milkweeds and hemp dogbane, and hosenettle. The first frost will cause these weeds to shut down, if they have not already matured and senesced. Herbicides are no longer effective after this occurs.

2) Can be treated after frost and in some cases even after a hard freeze. Winter annuals, biennials, and cool-season perennials fit into this category, and they are often most effectively controlled when herbicides are applied between mid-October and mid-November.

Mark Landefeld, an OSU Extension educator in Monroe County added the following in a recent on-line article:

"Farmers should monitor their fields regularly to identify weeds and deal with them in a timely manner," he said. "Not only can weeds decrease forage quality, but some can be invasive and reduce the tonnage of the forage that you are trying to harvest."

Some of the weeds to control

now include chickweed, henbit, purple deadnettle, and Canada thistle.

The drought conditions this year also have resulted in more weeds in some cases.

While herbicides often can be used to combat hay field and pasture weeds, farmers should make sure to evaluate the existing stand in case reseeding is a better option, Landefeld said.

The other key to effective control is to make sure the weeds have recovered fully from harvest, late summer mowing or earlier droughty conditions, and are fairly sizable. Canada thistle should be 8 to 12 inches tall for best results for a herbicide application.

Loux also mentioned that biennials, such as poison hemlock and wild carrot, are often effectively controlled in the fall at the end of their first year of growth, when they exist as a low-growing rosette.

It should also be noted that herbicides often become ineffective in treating weeds when

HONOR FLIGHT

On a beautiful fall day last Wednesday. Ten Veterans of WWII who reside at Heritage Pointe boarded the bus with a loved one or friend to travel Ft Wayne Air National Guard Base, the home of the 122nd Fighter Wing. They were served breakfast before boarding a plane to travel to Washington D.C. to see the WWII Memorial.

The day included stops to Lincoln Memorial, Vietnam Veteran Memorial and Korea War Memorial, as well as The Woman Memorial, the Air Force Memorial, and the changing of the Guards at Arlington National Cemetery. Many other D.C sights were seen for a guided tour bus. Complimentary lunch and supper was enjoyed by everyone.

Upon return to Ft. Wayne the Veterans were given a complimentary picture of the group and of themselves with the guest that went with them.

Special thanks to Heritage Pointe for allowing us to plan this trip and to our families, friends and community for also sharing the day with us. Walgreens gave each Veteran a complimentary camera and free development to capture the day of memories. Also a special thanks to George DeWeese for sending us with ten cases of water to share with everyone.

Those Veterans enjoying the day include; John Bellente and Kelly Jones, Artie Benefiel and George DeWeese, Floyd Blake and Charles Blake, Paul Bowling and Kim Park, Dale DeWeese and Jake Dillon, Loren Hall and Max Hall, Elwood Karchner and David Karchner, Clarence Myers and Lloyd Myers, Harry Rice and Peter Deal, Harold Slaughter and Tim Donovan.
