LESSENING PARENTAL WORRY ABOUT THE TEEN PARTY SEASON

from the American Counseling Association
 The end of the school year is fast approaching and for many teens this means a time to party. From graduation parties to just getting together spontaneously, this is the season for teenage parties.

But while parties are fun, and while most students have a lot to celebrate, it's nevertheless important for parents to stay on top of the party season. And with a few simple rules and the right approach, this is relatively easy to accomplish with most teens.

The key is not to be a dictator but a negotiator. Make establishing party season rules a cooperative affair with your teen and let him or her offer suggestions and input. Explain that you want your son or daughter to have a good time but you also want them to be safe and act responsibly. Together, formulate and agree on penalties if rules are broken.

One basic rule that shouldn't be hard to agree on is that you are given the contact info for the parents of the house for any party your teen is attending. When you don't know the parents, make a quick call to assure that an adult will be present and that no alcohol will be served. Your call can even be phrased as an offer to help, in order not to embarrass your teen.

Your teen should also agree that if the party's location is moved, he or she will give you a call or text and let you know where the new place is.

Driving arrangements and restrictions should also be spelled out up front. It's always forbidden to ride with someone who's been drinking or taking drugs. Let your teen understand that he or she can call at any time for a ride, or that you'll cover cab fare home, and that there will be no blame or repercussions.

Your teenager should understand that he or she is only responsible for himself or herself. Make it clear that there won't be punishment just because others get out of control or act irresponsibly.

You aren't trying to be a helicopter parent, controlling everything in your child's life and ruining his or her fun. What you really want is to ensure that the upcoming party season is safe and enjoyable for your teen, and less a source of worry and anxiety for you.

VOLUNTEERS HONORED

Recognizing those who spend their time in service to others was the focus of Parkview Huntington Hospital's (PHH) recent Volunteer Luncheon, held in mid-April at College Park Church in Huntington.

Members of the hospital's volunteer corps were honored for their dedication and length-of-service milestones ranging from 100 to 10,000 hours. Recognized for 100 to 2,500 hours of service were: June Augspurger, Sue Booth, Ellen Eppard, Nancy Getman, James Jones, Ann Miller, Phyllis Pieper, Richard Prange, Carolyn Stephens, Rocky Strickler and Carol Young.

In addition, Phyllis Pieper, a 20-year volunteer, received the 2010 Circle Award. The award honors volunteers who have given 20 years or at least 10,000 hours of service.

PHH Volunteer Coordinator Melanie Hull thanked all of the 48 volunteers who gathered for the festive occasion, noting that their compassion, dependability and conscientiousness are essential to the world-class service the hospital is able to provide.

"Our community thinks so highly of this hospital, and a lot of times, that great impression started with a volunteer's greeting them and offering assistance, and being helpful and kind. It also takes into account all those who work behind the scenes to keep our hospital running so smoothly. You truly have an impact on our patients and their families, and the employees. Please know you are valued and greatly appreciated!"

PHH volunteers perform a variety of functions including greeting visitors and guests, escorting patients from one department to another, assisting with special projects, and more. In addition, some volunteers work in the hospital gift shop, assisting customers with purchases and arranging merchandise. Others provide very specific functions, such as bringing trained therapy dogs to visit patients or providing free blood pressure checks each week in the hospital lobby.

Juli Johnson, PHH president, also paid tribute to the volunteers before stepping into a different role – as the caller for a few fun rounds of bingo.

5 QUESTIONS TO ASK

BEFORE MAKING A

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTION

(BPT) - Giving back by donating to a nonprofit can help you feel more connected to your community and have a lasting impact for someone else. In many cases, deciding where to donate your hard-earned funds can be overwhelming. After all, the array of groups requesting donations is substantial and includes 1.5 million registered nonprofits in the U.S. alone.

In 2017, overall giving to U.S. nonprofits grew approximately 4.1 percent, compared to 2016. Because there are more than a million nonprofits to choose from, the decision of where to donate requires serious thought. When looking to donate, you should set some key criteria for choosing a group that means something to you. During that process, you should consider the following five questions:

1. Does the organization have a history of success? Take a good look at when it was founded, exactly how it has helped people and what it has accomplished to date. Do its achievements align with your ideas as to how the world can best be improved? Will this nonprofit have a real and lasting impact on a cause that you deeply care about?

2. Do its contributions appeal to you emotionally? Contributing to a specialized nonprofit that pulls at your heartstrings can be the most fulfilling option. As such, you should seek an organization that clearly communicates how your money will be spent and how it will help people in real, tangible ways. For example, for more than three decades The National Children's Cancer Society (NCCS) has supported the families of nearly 42,000 children battling cancer, providing more than $65 million worth of transportation, emergency and emotional assistance, helping families stay strong, stay positive and stay together.

3. Can you easily find examples of individuals or families that have benefited from the organization? Actions speak louder than words. An organization may say how it helps others, but showing how it helps others is a proof point you should look for. Here's an example of what you should be looking for. The NCCS was approached by a mother whose then 19-month-old daughter, Paisley, was diagnosed with acute lymphoblastic leukemia. Paisley spent several drawn-out months in the hospital, along with unexpected emergency room visits due to high fevers. Paisley's mom, Paula, was a single mom spending enormous amounts of time caring for her daughter, and ultimately lost her job. Unemployed and with travel expenses quickly adding up, Paula almost lost her car. Paula was referred to the NCCS by her hospital social worker, and from there on out, the NCCS has been by Paula and Paisley's side. Through the Emergency Assistance Fund and the Transportation Assistance Fund, NCCS helped Paula keep her car and pay for mileage expenses, ensuring that Paisley will get to each and every doctor's appointment.

In another example, donations to the NCCS completely changed the lives of a family whose child has been struck three times by retinoblastoma, cancer of the eye. Parents Daniel and Marian are blind, and two of their three children, now 5 and 9, have endured multiple treatments since having potentially fatal eye tumors removed as infants. NCCS has helped by funding transportation and lodging for appointments, allowing the children to receive medical evaluations and surveillance. As of now, the chance their cancer will return stands at only 5 percent.

4. Does it serve people beyond just funding? Multiple organizations can redistribute your money to support worthy causes, but you may prefer to find one that also assists people in more personal ways. NCCS, for example, equips families with skilled case managers who provide practical and emotional support to help parents and caregivers navigate throughout their daunting childhood cancer journeys. Further, youth 10 to 17 are offered emotional support by young-adult mentors who have already survived cancer.

5. Is it credible? Is the charity you're looking to support accredited by the Better Business Bureau? That organization sets standards for charity accountability that include governance, fundraising practices, solicitations and more. While having an emotional tie to a charity is important, recognition by a comprehensive, in-depth evaluation service like the Better Business Bureau is imperative.

For more information about making a lasting impact, visit the NCCS.

WEEK

(SPM Wire) Allergic reactions to food range from hives and a stuffy nose to life-threatening anaphylaxis, and 15 million Americans have food allergies, according to Food Allergy Research & Education (FARE).

Here are ways you can celebrate Food Allergy Awareness Week, observed May 13-19, and potentially save lives in your community.

- Advocate that the schools in your community are stocked with epinephrine so that those suffering from a life-threatening allergic reaction can be treated swiftly.

- Teach your child to be a good friend to classmates with food allergies. Make sure they understand that bullying others about food allergies is unacceptable. Carefully review what food items to avoid sending with your child to school.

- Donate to FARE to support their efforts to improve the health of those with food allergies through research, education and advocacy. To learn more, visit foodallergy.org.

Understanding food allergies is the first step toward ensuring the health and safety of those with this medical condition.
