KBC UPDATE

A few years ago, we put the boat on the playground, and a little time later we built the pavilion. Then came the hail storm. The insurance company put on new shingles and patched the rubber on the flat roofs. Before they could patch all of the flat part, we had leaks in the upstairs. On top of that we had a couple heating pipes that leaked. We finished the upstairs last week.

A few weeks ago, we gutted the ladies' restroom beside the auditorium and are in the process of dividing it up into a ladies and men's. We hope to have it done by our luncheon, November 5. We, also, changed the two doors on the parking lot side.

Our annual luncheon will be from 11 to 1 on Sunday November 5 at the Knight Bergman Center. The meal will be herb crusted chicken or apricot glazed pork loin prepared by Kim's Catered Affair. It will be a free will donation. Proceeds will go toward remodeling the kitchen. We plan to remove the old commercial stove and ovens and replace with new electric stoves. We want to do something with the floor and some other things. So, come out Nov. 5, have a good meal and help make your KBC Civic Center a great place to use.

TAKING ACTION TO GET WHAT YOU WANT FROM LIFE

from the American Counseling Association

Have you ever found yourself thinking that your life just has not worked out as you once planned? Many of us realize at some point that our past optimistic visions have had to surrender to reality.

Instead of feeling sorry about things that haven't happened or didn't work out, you might try some of these tips to get you closer to your dreams.

One starting point is put anger, blame or helplessness aside. Forget past hurts or abandonments. Unresolved anger and resentment uses up energy much better spent on building the life you desire.

Nest, find your own voice. Often past relationships leave us unsure of ourselves or reluctant to express our feelings. You want to move to honest living and loving. Don't worry that speaking up will make you appear selfish or overbearing. You don't want to be controlling, simply honest and understood.

It also helps to learn to say "No" sometimes. Set limits and know when you've done enough. Avoid excessive demands on your time, talent and goodwill. Doing so creates room to say "yes" to things you really want to do, and avoids the resentment that comes with agreeing to things you really don't want to do.

Try identifying your personal strengths and interests, and then to put time into nourishing them. Rather than trying to be someone you're not, try enhancing who you really are.

Then take action, even if in just small steps. Make a resolution to take one daily action that moves you closer to your desires: make that initial phone call, rewrite your resume, organize your closet, clean out those old files. Too often we fail to take a first step in a new direction. Don't wait until you feel like doing it, just begin.

This is also a good time to create an overall balance in your life. If any one area of your life is consuming all or most of your time, look at small ways to make a shift. It might be work, social contacts, family demands or something else that keeps you from enjoying who you are. A healthy life means finding a balance in a variety of areas: physical, social, emotional, work/productivity, intellectual and spiritual.

A life that is too busy can easily crowd out moments of reflection which can help reconnect you with your core self and your reason for being.

RAISING AWARENESS

The Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH) is urging residents and healthcare providers to test young children for lead exposure as part of National Lead Poisoning Prevention Week Oct. 22-28.

"Lead exposure can have a significant impact on the health of our children, but these adverse effects are preventable," said State Health Commissioner Kris Box, MD, FACOG. "By making parents and healthcare providers more aware of the risk factors and the need to test our homes and our children, we can better protect Hoosiers."

Lead is a naturally occurring element found in small amounts in the Earth's crust. Lead-based paint and lead-contaminated dust in deteriorating buildings are the primary sources of lead exposure for U.S. children. Children under age 6 are most vulnerable because the brain is still developing and because they are more likely to put their hands in their mouths after touching surfaces containing lead. The effects of lead exposure in young children can include changes to the IQ, decreased ability to pay attention and underperformance at school. At extremely high levels, lead exposure can lead to a coma and death.

Although lead-based paint was banned in 1978, homes built prior to that date may still have lead paint that puts children at risk. Children also can be exposed to lead through contaminated drinking water and soil and from consumer products such as ceramics, toys and costume jewelry.

Here are some things Hoosiers can do to help protect their families:

Get your home tested, especially if it was built before 1978. Request a lead inspection before purchasing an older home.

Get your child tested. Medicaid requires that children under age 2 be tested for lead. Even if young children seem healthy, request testing – especially if you have risk factors.

Learn about your drinking water. Water pipes in some older homes may contain lead solder, allowing lead to leach into the water. Learn more about lead in drinking water here.

Understand the facts. Your local health department can provide you with information about preventing childhood lead exposure. Contact information can be found here: <http://www.in.gov/isdh/24822.htm>.

CONCERTO/ARIA COMPETITION

The Marion Philharmonic Orchestra will host the 28th Annual Concerto/Aria Competition at 9 a.m. on Saturday, November 18, 2017, in the Baker Recital Hall at Indiana Wesleyan University. The competition is sponsored by its inaugural winner, Dr. Steve Hyman, and the MPO Friends. YOUTH GRANTS

While there are any number of scholarship programs to help students afford college, a new grant program instituted by the Hunter Brooks Watson Memorial Fund is now offering young people, whether in school or not, the opportunity to win grant awards of up to $5,000.

What makes this program different is its policy of awarding grants to young people between the ages of 16 and 25 who have a demonstrated enthusiasm and passion in their lives. The Memorial Fund's grants' focus is on encouraging those with interests in the performing arts, technology, music or entrepreneurship who need funding to help take their passion to the next level.

The Memorial Fund was created in honor of Hunter Brooks Watson, a young man tragically killed as a passenger in a car crash in the spring of 2016, just before he was to enter his junior year at Syracuse University. Hunter had already reached levels of success in a variety of areas, including music, performing, starting a business, and as a computer technology major at Syracuse.

The Grants Programs does not require the young person to be in school, to have a certain GPA, nor to be a member of any religious group or demonstrate school leadership or athletic accomplishments. It's only aim is to identify young people who need the financial help to follow their passions.

Further information, and the grant application itself, is available online at hunterwatson.org/grants. The application deadline for the current grant cycle is November 15, 2017. There are no costs or fees associated with applying for these grants.

5 REASONS TO SKIP THE STADIUM AND WATCH THE GAME AT HOME

(BPT) - For many, fall is back-to-school season. It's the time for pumpkin-spiced coffee, decorative gourds, scarves and cardigans. But by far, the most exciting part of fall is when the sports world begins to heat up. As the football season kicks off, baseball playoffs begin and inevitably, one of our friends tells us about the great tickets they have to a game.

Whether you follow basketball, football, hockey or any other sport, hearing that someone has tickets to the game can make you wild with envy.

It shouldn't.

Simply put, you can have a much better time watching the game at home. Skeptical? These five reasons should convince you otherwise.

1. Better food and better everything. Would you rather sit on a hard chair like the one you sat in at elementary school and eat a soggy, $10 hot dog, or relax in a recliner and feast on a spread of dips, chips, snacks and barbecue? The answer is pretty obvious. Staying home is just more comfortable and enjoyable. Best of all, it's unlikely a stranger will spill their drink on you. Though that may depend on who you invite over!

2. You can get better-than-the-best seats. Even if you were friends with the owner and had no shortage of cash, you couldn't get closer to the action than with the proper television. There are many models out there with a lot of features, but the 2017 lineup of LG OLED TVs, from the LG OLED C7 up to the LG OLED SIGNATURE W7, is simply awe-inspiring. LG's proprietary OLED technology creates perfect blacks, offering over a billion rich colors that show up perfectly from any seat in the room. That makes every hit, goal and three-pointer come to life right before your eyes, like it never has before.

3. You're already there. Perhaps one of the worst parts of going to see a game is dealing with the traffic. With thousands of people all trying to get to the same place, traffic jams are inevitable and it's easy to get frustrated. Too often, this ordeal can spoil your mood before your team even begins to lose!

4. Why limit yourself to one game? At any given time, there are a lot of sports going on, and if you're a fan it can be maddening to decide what game to watch and which one to miss. The solution is to skip the stadium and record multiple games at once, or find a TV with a smart operating system that allows you to switch back and forth easily, such as LG's award-winning webOS Smart TV platform, which comes with LG's OLEDs and LG SUPER UHD TVs. With webOS you can record all the must-see games in gorgeous 4K quality and watch them when you want. Weekend sports binge? It's now possible, and far better than sitting in the nosebleed section and watching another game on your phone!

5. The weather is always right. Rain, snow or just cold temperatures might be alluring to some, but even the most hardcore of fans sometimes want to forgo the chills and discomfort and simply enjoy the game. And who can blame them? When you're comfortable, you get more out of the game.

Take advantage of the technology that's available! With a wide range of models of the best televisions available, LG Electronics USA is your ticket to the best season yet.

5 TIPS TO KEEP SNIFFLES

AND SNEEZES OUT OF YOUR HOLIDAY PLANS

(BPT) - With the holidays upon us, there's a lot to look forward to: seeing old friends, eating too much, wearing ugly sweaters; the list goes on. Likewise, there are a lot of things that might make you sigh: awkward questions from your aunts, arguing about politics and of course, how you're going to work off all that extra weight in the new year.

One question millions of Americans should keep in mind this holiday season is how to best handle their asthma and allergies. While everyone else is singing along to carols and letting their food digest, others are tearing up, coughing and going into a sneezing fit.

"People don't realize how many hidden triggers are associated with the holidays and winter season," said allergist Bradley Chipps, MD, president of the American College of Allergy, Asthma and Immunology (ACAAI). "Those who suffer from allergies and asthma assume things will ease up once the cold weather hits, but there are other factors that can cause your allergies and asthma to flare. In fact, two-thirds of allergy sufferers have year-round triggers and symptoms."

To help make the holidays as enjoyable as possible, here are five tips to manage your allergies this season.

An excuse to stay out of the hugging circle. There are a lot of hugs and kisses during the holidays, which can make it easy for germs and viruses to spread. Catching a cold or coming down with the flu is pretty awful, but because those illnesses make asthma and allergy symptoms even worse, those with allergies must take extra precautions. One more reason to avoid the mistletoe!

Watch out for that ... tree! For many, picking out a Christmas tree is a holiday tradition. For others, a tree can be pure misery. Mold on the tree and terpene found in the sap can trigger allergies you thought you had under control. A much better option is to use an artificial tree - just be sure to dust it off! Dust allergies can be a problem year-round.

Keep an eye on holiday treats. Holidays are about food, and people usually share the food they make. As a result, you need to be extra careful about food allergies. If you or your kids have food allergies, let your host know what ingredients should be avoided. If you are hosting, prepare food you know everyone in your clan can eat.

Your nose knows to sniff out those "pleasant" scents. People love to add those little touches to create a cozy holiday atmosphere in their homes. Unfortunately, scented candles, wood-burning fireplaces, aerosols and potpourri can trigger allergies and asthma. There are plenty of other nice touches you can add, but this year, forgo the scents!

Leave the house prepared. Whether it's someone's lovable dog, a co-worker wearing too much perfume or a moldy Christmas tree, many triggers exist out there. Before you leave the house, take your medications, and if your allergy and asthma symptoms worsen during the season, be sure to schedule an appointment with your allergist.

If you need help with allergies, visit AllergyandAsthmaRelief.org to find a board-certified allergist in your area. ACAAI member-allergists are board-certified physicians trained to diagnose allergies and asthma, administer allergy shots (immunotherapy), and provide patients with the best treatment outcomes.
