Kudos, Kicks & Karats

Well we had a good weekend. We went to the big city of Indianapolis to the Jamboree Nationals and brought home another plaque to add to our wall this time "Best 4x4 Truck 1997 to Present" so we really stepped up the ladder in our class, which is street zero. When I mean street zero it means very little alteration to the jeep. We are allowed some but very limited to what we can do, clear down to the decals in the windows.

There is a total of four classes we can enter all depending on what was done on the vehicle. As I mentioned street zero, street class, modified class, and pro.

Every year the Indy show is the largest of the three as far as entries and it's hard to win there. It runs anywhere from 3000 to 5000 trucks on the state fairgrounds. Now not all of them are there for the show and shine event, but a big majority are. When we register we get a card we put in our window and when the judge comes around and the card is in the window he will judge your vehicle. It takes the judge all day Saturday to get it done then on Sunday is awards day.

On the drive home, we decided it's time to head out to Bloomsburg PA and show the Jeep there. We went back in 2010 with the gray jeep I had but didn't participate in the show-n-shine event. We are going to try to take all 3 shows, Lima Ohio, Bloomsburg PA, and Indy. It's worth a shot and we will see what happens.

My dad would have loved this jeep we got now. Back when I had the gray jeep, we went topless one day and he loved it.

The wind was blowing through what little hair he had, but he smiled the whole time we were out. I could tell he was having a great time. My mom and sister didn't go on the topless adventure, but I did take them occasionally when the top was on and they dubbed it the mafia wagon, because of the tinted windows. I laughed about it just this weekend, when we got word the Green Jeeps Only club merged with the Jeep Mafia club. So yes mom we now belong to the mafia. lol.

So now we need to settle in for harvest season, which is coming soon. On our drive home we noticed some beans have been picked. Some of them will be ready soon and some later. The corn is getting there, ears are slowly dropping and it won't be long on it. So please remember, if you get behind slow moving tractors or semi's loading, please slow down and be careful, enjoy the scenery, it's always beautiful in the fall and I promise you that you will enjoy it and still get to where you need to be. Let's have a great and safe harvest.

MAINTAIN SEPTIC SYSTEMS

The Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH) is reminding Hoosiers to maintain their septic systems as part of SepticSmart Week, a national observance designed to educate homeowners and communities about the importance of caring for septic systems.

According to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), more than one in five households in the United States (60 million people) depend on septic systems to treat their wastewater. Nearly 39 percent of Hoosiers use septic systems to treat wastewater from their homes and businesses. About 15,000 septic systems are installed and about 6,000 repaired in Indiana each year. Proper maintenance of these systems is a vital part of protecting public health.

"Septic system maintenance is important and is the best way to protect human and environmental health," said Mike Mettler, REHS, director of Environmental Public Health at ISDH. "Have your system checked at least every three years and keep records of all maintenance work."

Septic system owners are responsible for maintaining their onsite wastewater treatment systems. SepticSmart Week provides homeowners an opportunity to learn measures that will help them properly use and maintain their systems and protect their investments in their homes. Homeowners with septic systems are urged to follow these tips:

Have systems inspected every three years by a licensed contractor, and have tanks pumped every three to five years, or more frequently if necessary.

Avoid pouring fats, grease and solids down the drain.

Monitor water use and spread out laundry and dishwasher loads throughout the day. Too much water at once can overload a system.

Fix plumbing leaks and consider installing faucet aerators.

Never park or drive on a system's absorption field where the vehicle's weight could damage buried pipes or disrupt underground flow.

The EPA's SepticSmart program promotes proper septic system use and maintenance all year long. Industry practitioners, local governments, homeowners and community organizations can learn more about septic systems at www.onsite.isdh.in.gov.

A TRIP TO RHODE ISLAND

Day #5 by Larry Ryan
This morning the bus traversed both long bridges back to mainland Rhode Island and headed south past the town of Narragansett to Point Judith. This area is adjacent to the fishing village of Galilee, R.I. We were loaded onto the Block Island Ferry for a 14 mile, high-speed trip to the aforementioned Block Island and the village of Block Island, R. I. This ferry boat, "The Athena" just happened to be on the Hudson River and was one of the first to reach Captain Sullinger's floating aircraft. Their crew rescued several passengers. We were riding in an historic boat.

This island was discovered in 1524 and is 7 miles long and 3 miles wide. The naming is credited to Adrian Block, a Dutch Explorer. Now the Netherlands is known for more than just soccer and raising tulips!

Our first siting after exiting The Athena was the "Cracked Mud Café." It made me wish that we should have packed some peanut butter sandwiches. Prior to the Europeans arriving in 1661, the Manisee and Mohegan Indians battled to keep possession of the island. The last of the Indians left in 1784. The island is 160 feet above sea level near the lighthouses whose beacons project for 20 miles. This land is also 26 miles from Montauk, on New York Island. It has 17 miles of beaches, a population of 1,051, and an offshore wind farm.

It was a poor area from 1940 to 1960 as a hurricane wiped out the fishing village. After 1970, the housing increased from 700 to 1700 units. The initial inhabitants used dried peat moss as fuel to heat their homes.

This area becomes a summer resort for people from Connecticut and Boston. It is less expensive than Newport. Presidents Clinton, Eisenhower, FDR, and U.S. Grant have visited. As an unusual side attraction, a horseshoe crab was sunning himself/herself on the rocks at our bus stop. Have photo to prove this.

Through history of the Rhode Island area, as many as 500 ship wrecks have occurred. Of note, the Italian ship, Andrea Doria was sunk east of here in 1956 after a collision with the Swedish ship, Miss Stockholm which was off course. John Greenleaf Wittier wrote a long poem about the ship, The Palatine that crashed into Block Island in 1867.

Besides rocky shores, early residents used rocks for walls/fences to separate properties or surround fields. Most of these rocks were round in shape due to their previous time in volatile ocean activity! These do not stack well!

The native Indians were pivotal in the survival of the early European residents to this country. For instance they taught the Rhode Island pilgrims the "The Three Sister's Farming System:" #1. Plant Corn seed-- when the stalks reach 12 inches in height; 2. Plant Bean seed beside the corn to climb upon; and #3. Plant Squash seed between the rows for ground cover and moisture retention. Currently corn, potatoes, and pumpkins are the main crops here. The largest pumpkin weight ever reported was two tons! How many pies???

Other notable facts about Rhode Island: Wise and Lay's Potato Chip Companies are major employers; Peter Gibbons Jewelry Company is located in R.I. and is well known in Indiana. Another resident, Henry Macus Quackenbush invented the nut cracker in 1878(200 million have been sold to date), the air gun, the lobster shell cracker, and the extension ladder in 1913. He was a busy man.

And lastly, that infamous, Scottish Captain William Kidd, a renowned pirate once roamed the waters near Rhode Island. He eventually married a Quaker lady in NYC. Even having a good friend like her did not keep him on shore very long though.

Lunch this day was served on the balcony of The National Hotel overlooking Block Island Sound. And we did make it back to Newport safely before dark.

We will be starting back towards home tomorrow.

A RESOURCE NOT TO BE IGNORED - THE SCHOOL COUNSELOR

from the American Counseling Association. Many parents aren't aware of the wide range of services their schools' counselors have to offer. Yes, professional school counselors often provide help for students facing classroom struggles, but their range of assistance goes far beyond that.

School counselors have expertise and skills to benefit just about every student. They're also a resource to support every parent. A starting point in making the best use of your school's counselors is to recognize that these are counselors who have completed extensive training to work in schools. All school counselors are certified or licensed by their state and in most states are required to have completed at least a Masters degree or the equivalent.

A school counselor's training is focused on understanding young people and their educational and developmental needs. A school counselor's education equips him or her with the tools and means to help students achieve their academic, personal/social, and career goals. Through their work with students, counselors can advise teachers, students and parents about classes offering the appropriate challenges and the best educational outcomes.

School counselor's work with older students can include information about which classes can best fulfill their educational and career goals, as well as explaining options for colleges, technical training or other directions after high school. And, as trained professional counselors, school counselors can also assist students facing potential problem areas. From substance abuse to bullying situations to improving study skills, school counselors are there to help students at any grade level, as well as their families, better handle the variety of challenges students face today.

Counselors aren't magicians, but they can offer proven techniques and approaches that can assist in addressing real problems.

Don't wait for a crisis to talk with your child's school counselor. An introductory meeting early in the year gives you a chance to meet the counselor, discuss your child, and learn what assistance might be available. Even more important is to contact that counselor quickly when problems first appear. Slipping grades or abrupt changes in a child's attitude, behavior or friends, can all be signs that help is needed. That's when a professional counselor can make a real difference.

School counselors are professionals who have a great deal to offer our children. When we don't take advantage of their training, skills and experience, we're only shortchanging ourselves, our children and our children's educational experience.

"Counseling Corner" is provided by the American Counseling Association. Comments and questions to ACAcorner@counseling.org or visit the ACA website at www.counseling.org.

Is YOUR CHILD'S PHYSICAL DEVELOPMENT ON TRACK?

(StatePoint) All children develop at their own pace. Sometimes however, a child may not do certain activities that other children the same age are doing -- like sitting without support, rolling over, walking or other physical skills. Parents may question whether their child has a physical developmental delay.

How can you tell if your child's physical development is on track?

Free online tools and guides can be a good start. The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) offers an interactive tool called "Physical Developmental Delays: What to Look For," available at healthychildren.org/motordevelopment. Available in English and Spanish, this interactive tool helps parents learn more about their child's physical development, and how to talk to their child's pediatrician about their concerns.

A physical developmental delay can be a sign of a serious health condition, so it's important to discuss your concerns with your child's pediatrician and get help as needed.
