BASEMENT REPORT

The Knight-Bergman Center Bargain Basement recently received a nice donation of electronic items. We have a nice fax machine, a photo printer, a Canon printer and a Brother electric typewriter. We also have a very nice manual Canon camera. It would be great for someone beginning an interest in photography - comes with two lenses, filters, etc. - would be a great learning tool. It is an older top of the line camera with case. We have information printed from the internet to help you with it.

We want to thank Griff Bustos for volunteering to keep our steps cleaned off this winter. We greatly appreciate the help!

KUDOS, KICKS & KARATS

THIS IS THE DAY

by Johnny A. Phillips

In more ways than one, particularly one, Galileo reminds me of Sheldon, the role played by Jim Parsons on The Big Bang Theory.

Galileo Galilei was born into a theological world which found reaffirmation in each morning's rising Sun. According to the intellectuals of the 17th Century, the Sun revolved about the immovable Earth, the single, constant certainty of the universe, as did all the other planets and the Moon. In this doctrinally correct understanding of the cosmos, the Earth was not in the privileged center of the universe, rather it was at the bottom. The only place lower was Hell itself. Subsequently, even a simpleton could easily grasp the spiritual need to move upward through prayer and obedience.

The mechanics of the heavens provided both a clock and a calendar for the people and the church. Sunrise and sunset established the workday, mealtimes, prayer times, the Sabbath and most other daily activities. The Sun presaged Christmas while the phases of the Moon established the observance of Easter and the practice of Lent. But Galileo understood the universe in the language of mathematics --- geometric figures, elliptical orbits, calculus equations and theories of physics.

In 1609 the gift of a Dutch toy, a child's simple telescope, supplied him a tool for the scientific cosmic observations never enjoyed before. Eventually Galileo discovered the moons of Jupiter and the phases of Venus which in turn steered him to declare that Copernicus' theory to be valid, that the Earth was not static but actually orbiting the Sun in explanation of the Solar System's pattern.

Despite possessing his opinionated nature accompanied by his dissenting view of the cosmos, all was going well for this man who immediately gained the reputation as the world's most famous scientist. That was until his ambition for wealth and social status led him to relinquish the academic freedom of the university in Padua, place his daughters in a convent so that he would not have to support them, and enter society's upper echelons in Florence. His oversized ego also conveyed him directly into a confrontation with Grand Duchess Christina, a Biblical literalist and not one to be taken lightly. When asked by the grand duchess about certain Biblical passages, instead of replying tactfully, Galileo's ego compelled their difference of Biblical interpretation into an extended confrontation.

The matter of Galileo's assertion of the Earth revolving around the Sun eventually came under the scrutiny of the Inquisition which, on this day, February 13, in 1633, intimidated him into recanting his view of the cosmos.

It is almost lost in history that the real problem for Galileo was not his planetary theory but that his ego was about the size of the cosmos. Had he found satisfaction as a professor of mathematics and astronomy in Padua instead of seeking a celebrity status in Florence, the relationship between science and religion might have found a much more amiable course through history.

He, and all of us, would have done well to have taken to heart the words of Proverbs, "When pride comes, then comes disgrace, but

The subject of the photo must be in Indiana and more than 50 years old. Images could include anything from a cemetery, to a main street to a grain silo. The contest does not place limitations on the condition of the historic resource. Past entries have involved subject matter with conditions ranging from pristine to undergoing demolition.

The contest deadline is April 3, 2015.

The contest is free, and photographers can submit up to three entries per person.

Photos will be judged by a panel of DNR representatives, preservationists and photographers.

For a list of contest guidelines, the mailing address, and the required entry form, go to dnr.IN.gov/historic/3994.htm.

To celebrate Historic Preservation Month in May, selected photos from the contest will be on exhibit at the following locations:

will be well-known, while others are underappreciated architectural jewels.

Investigating and containing measles is nothing new for health officials in the Hoosier state. Since 2005, Indiana has experienced 67 cases of measles, including an outbreak in 2012 that made national headlines when two individuals with measles visited Super Bowl Village in downtown Indianapolis while infectious.

"We've been lucky that in recent years we haven't lost any lives due to measles, but I'm afraid that might not always be the case," said State Health Commissioner Jerome Adams, M.D., M.P.H. "With measles once again posing a serious threat, we are working to inform health care providers about signs and symptoms and continue to encourage all Hoosiers to check your vaccination status and get the appropriate doses of the Measles, Mumps and Rubella vaccine if you haven't already done so."

Measles was declared eliminated (absence of continuous disease transmission for greater than 12 months) from the U.S. in 2000 thanks to a highly effective vaccination program. Measles is still commonly transmitted (endemic or large outbreaks) in many parts of the world. This includes Europe, Asia, the Pacific, and Africa. Worldwide, an estimated 20 million people get measles and 122,000 die from the disease each year.

Before the United States measles vaccination program started in 1963, about 3 to 4 million people in the U.S. got measles each year; 400 to 500 of them died, 48,000 were hospitalized, and 4,000 developed encephalitis because of measles.

"The cases of measles in the infants in Illinois clearly demonstrate just how important it is that every one of us gets vaccinated," said Dr. Adams. "Vaccinations not only protect us and our loved ones, but they also protect vulnerable members of society who may not be able to get vaccinated, such as babies and individuals whose immune systems are suppressed due to chronic disease."

About Measles - Measles is a highly contagious respiratory disease caused by a virus. It is rare in the United States due to high vaccination rates with the Measles, Mumps, Rubella (MMR) vaccine; however, visitors from other countries or unvaccinated U.S. citizens traveling abroad can become infected outside the United States and bring measles back with them.

More than 95 percent of people who receive a single dose of MMR will develop immunity to measles, and more than 99 percent will be protected after receiving a second dose. Two doses of the vaccine are needed to be fully protected. Individuals are encouraged to check with their health care providers to ensure vaccinations are up-to-date.

Children are routinely vaccinated for measles at 1 year of age, and again between the ages of 4-6 before going to kindergarten, but children as young as 6 months old can receive the measles vaccine if they will be traveling to a country where measles is endemic, or are otherwise at risk. Individuals born before 1957 are presumed to be immune to measles, unless they are health care providers. Individuals who are unsure about vaccination history should contact their health care providers. Hoosiers can also access immunization records directly through the secure online tool, called MyVaxIndiana, by requesting a PIN from their health care provider.

Visit www.MyVaxIndiana.in.gov to learn more.

Symptoms - Measles begins with a fever, cough, runny nose, and red eyes about 7-10 days after exposure. The fever increases and can get as high as 105 degrees. Two to four days later, a rash starts on the face and upper neck. It spreads down the back and trunk, and then extends to the arms and hands, as well as the legs and feet. After about five days, the rash fades the same order in which it appeared.

Measles is highly contagious. When infected persons sneeze or cough, droplets spray into the air. Those droplets remain active and contagious in the air for up to two hours.

"Hands down, the best way to prevent measles is to get two doses of the MMR vaccine for people born after 1957," said Dr. Adams. "With flu and other contagious illnesses also going around, it's always a good idea to also wash your hands frequently, cover your cough and stay home if you become sick."

If you don't have health care coverage or access to a doctor, see if you're eligible for the new Healthy Indiana Plan—HIP 2.0—by visiting www.HIP.IN.gov or calling 1-877-GET-HIP-9.

For more information about measles, please visit the Indiana State Department of Health at www.StateHealth.in.gov or the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention at <http://www.cdc.gov/measles/>.

AGING WORKFORCE

Older employees more focused on the satisfaction of a job well done

America's ageing workforce is a good thing for employers and the economy, according to Dan Weber, president of the Association of Mature American Citizens, noting that a new Gallup poll shows that "employee engagement increases with age, even well into workers' 60s and 70s."

The poll concluded that older workers are more "involved in and enthusiastic about their work and more productive members of their workplace -- than younger workers."

Weber said it is no secret that over the next 20 years Americans will be turning 65 at a rate of 10,000 a day. "It's not surprising, therefore, that seniors are staying on the job much longer than in the past. Some seniors continue to work well past traditional retirement to make ends meet; many stay because they find fulfillment in their jobs."

He pointed out that people are not only living longer these days, they're living healthier, more active lives. That, combined with the greater freedom at home that comes with reduced family obligations, makes older employees more focused on the satisfaction of a job well done.

The U.S. Census Bureau says that in 1984 about 15% of the workforce was 65 years of age or older and that in 2014 the labor participation rate of men and women over 65 had grown to nearly 27%.

The Gallup survey found that employers gain a competitive advantage by utilizing the experience of older workers and taking advantage of the knowledge they've gained over the years. Meanwhile, a separate study by Gary Burtless, a researcher at the Brookings Institution, indicated that older workers are more productive, as well.

"Compared with earlier generations of aged Americans and compared with contemporary prime-age workers, today's elderly are unusually well educated. Their high relative earnings and later retirement are partly explained by this fact," Burtless concluded.

Weber said that working seniors have a positive effect on the economy. They have more disposable income and, as a result, have created a growth market for private sector companies. In fact, he pointed out, J.P. Morgan has put together an Aging Population Index to keep track of companies that benefit from the country's ageing citizenry.

In addition, Weber noted that working Baby Boomers pay more taxes and are helping to bolster both their local and national economies.

"Ageism is still a problem for older workers, but there are signs that employers are waking up to the reality that there are a lot of benefits to keeping senior employees on their payrolls and hiring from the fast-growing pool of older job seekers. They are beginning to realize that they can be excellent role models for younger workers, that their enthusiasm is infectious, that in most cases the work means more to them than their paychecks and, of course, that they have had a lifetime of learning from their mistakes," Weber said.

HE, SHE OR IT?

There are no more men or women at the City College of New York; there are just "them," according to the Association of Mature American Citizens.

"Effective Spring 2015, the (graduate center's) policy is to eliminate the use of gendered salutations and references in correspondence to students, prospective students, and third parties. Accordingly, Mr. and Ms. should be omitted from salutations." That's the memo circulated to school staff by their politically correct superiors.

The ruling has caused quite a stir among faculty at CUNY, reminiscent of the flap over the "gender neutral" International Bible a few years back when scholars rid the good book of masculine and feminine pronouns. According to AMAC, the Bible's editors made an exception in referencing the Almighty; they continued to refer to "He" and "Him."

A MAGIC MOMENT

A nine-year-old student at the Kermit, Texas Elementary School found out the hard way that you should leave your magic ring at home. Aiden Steward had his Hobbit ring with him when he told a classmate he could make him disappear by placing it on his head.

The school's principal took it as a threat and sent Aiden home, reports the Association of Mature American Citizens.

His dad stuck up for the kid. He told reporters: "I assure you my son lacks the magical powers necessary to threaten his friend's existence. If he did, I'm sure he'd bring him right back."

THE COWBOY'S LAMENT

You can't blame Gene Bryson, a sheriff's deputy in Wyoming, for handing in his badge. His superiors told him he'd have to give up his cowboy outfit and start dressing like a cop instead of a deputy, according to the Association of Mature American Citizens.

Bryson has worn a Stetson on his head, cowboy boots on his feet and a western style vest for the 40 years he's been a deputy.

"That's what looks good to me in the sheriff's department. It's Western. It's Wyoming."

His boss, Sheriff Stephen Haskell, wanted no exceptions to the new dress code he had instituted: black trousers, a tan shirt, black work boots and a black ball cap.

But Bryson, who seldom has heard such a discouraging word, was not about to give up his cowboy outfit. He said: "That's the way I dress. Three hundred sixty-five days out of the year."

TIPS TO MANAGE PAIN

FROM ARTHRITIS NATURALLY

(StatePoint) One in five adults in the United States now reports having doctor-diagnosed arthritis, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). For those living with the chronic pain of this disease, learning how to manage arthritis is crucial to the health and happiness of millions of Americans.

With that in mind, here are several natural ways to reduce complications and pain associated with arthritis:

- Those who are overweight or obese are diagnosed with an arthritis symptom more often than those with a lower body mass index, according to CDC statistics. Take a load off your joints by maintaining a healthy weight. Weight loss has also been linked to less pain from arthritis, especially in the knees, which bear the brunt of excess pounds.

- Evidence indicates that both endurance and resistance exercise can provide significant benefits to those with osteoarthritis, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. However, arthritis patients should typically avoid placing too much pressure on joints. Low-impact exercises such as biking, swimming and walking are recommended treatments for arthritis. A doctor or physical therapist is a good resource for helping you make a fitness game plan.

- No matter what precautions you take, pain from your condition is sometimes inevitable. And when it's severe, it can be debilitating.

Some arthritis medications mask pain, which may make it harder to gauge the status of your condition. A homeopathic medicine, however, works naturally with your body to ease suffering from arthritis pain.

"Joint pains are common in my practice so I often recommend Arnicare Arthritis Tablets," says Dr. Albert Levy of Manhattan Family Practice in New York City (Manhattanfamilypractice.com). "I feel confident in recommending it because it won't interfere with other medications and homeopathic medicines, such as this, are one of the safest classes of drugs."

Arnicare Arthritis Tablets are quick-dissolving homeopathic tablets that relieve minor aches and pains associated with arthritis, specifically from stiff or swollen joints and flare-ups caused by changes in weather. They can be a good option for those with multiple conditions. More information can be found at www.Arnica.com.

- Stiff joints can be painful. Stretch regularly to prevent stiffness. Full range of motion exercises can help you stay limber and maintain function.

Arthritis actually refers to more than 100 different kinds of musculoskeletal disorders that affect people of all ages. If you're one of the millions of Americans suffering from arthritis, take natural steps to prevent and manage the pain associated with your condition.

MOST KIDS NOT SLEEPING ENOUGH: HOW TO HELP

(StatePoint) While parents understand the value of good sleep, a majority find it difficult to ensure their kids get enough quality sleep each night, according to a recent survey of parents across the country.

From using electronic devices in bed to a lack of bedroom routines, there are plenty of reasons kids are not getting enough sleep. But high-quality sleep is important, reports the same sleep survey, conducted by Sleep Number, with the majority of parents saying that sleep impacts their child's performance in school and in extracurricular activities.

Luckily, new tools are helping kids rest easier at night. For example, Sleep Number just introduced SleepIQ Kids – a smart bed for kids. You can adjust the bed's firmness as children grow and monitor their presence in bed, restfulness and restlessness to assess quality of sleep.

with humility comes wisdom." Paul's advice to the Philippian congregation is also applicable: "Do nothing out of vain conceit. Rather, in humility, value others above yourselves."

There is not a problem among neighbors, friends or in churches where this truth would not improve relations.
